LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS. SESSION OF 1872.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY, June 8th. The Printing Committee reported back sundry bills as completed

Hon. A. F. Judd presented his bill for the protection of woods and forests. Ordered printed. Hon. Mr. Halemanu read for the first time a bill and no great degree of school-girl grief at partingto abolish the practice of men and women living ogether as paramours.

to road supervisors on each island-passed.

ORDER OF THE DAY. The bill respecting the proving of claims on the property of deceased persons, was, on motion of the Attorney General, placed at the end of the orders of the day. The bill to amend Sec. 198 of the Civil Code, together with the report of the Select Committee thereon, was also placed at the end of the file. The bill to amend Sec. 1284 of the Civil Code, relating to marriage (providing that in no case shall it be lawful to marry without a license;) also, two others relating to the same subject, were read a second time, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Hon. Messrs. S. H. Phillips, W. T. Martin, G. W. D. Halemanu, A. F. Judd, and L.

The bill to amend Sec. 503 of the Civil Code, was rend a second time. (Relating to tax collectors.) The Minister of Finance moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed. It strikes out the provision of law to the effect that in case of no property being found, the person may be compelled to work out his tax on the roads. The power must be left somewhere to enforce the collection of taxes. There was a large class in this Kingdom who had neither real or personal estate. How are we to make this class pay taxes, if we give up the claim upon their personal services? The effect would be that they rould escape altogether, and the burden of supporting the government would fail entirely upon those who have any property. This section which it is proposed to amend, is no hardship upon any one. During the past year, there was but one person in the district of Honolulu, who was made to work under this law. Hon. Mr. Carter could believe that in the States of Mississippi or Georgia before the late rebellion, such a statute as this might have existed, providing that the person could be seized for the non-payment of taxes, and his time sold at the rate of 25 cents per day. This law here was the more surprising in view of the personal freedom guaranteed by the Constitution. The imprisonment of the one man mentioned by the Minister of Finance, was, he believed, the Ministers would acknowledge, an utconstitutional act. It has been said on this floor that you cannot legislate for this people as you would for another race or people. How, he would ask, are the people to be educated up to the value of freedom, when there are such laws on our statutes as this and others, curtailing personal liberty. The Minister of Foreign Affairs quoted the laws of Massachusetts, as containing the same provision as our own statute.

released in Massachusetts under that law, on proving that he had no money or means, Hon. Mr. Carter said that the comparison between o a man to work

The Minister of the Interior objected to discussing the laws of Massachusetts in this Assembly. Hon. Mr. Carter said that during the last session of the Assembly, the Minister of Foreign Affairs quoted the laws of Massachusetts on a certain occasion, because it suited his parpose, and when it suited his purpose he misquoted them. Mr. Carter was aware that the statutes of Massachusetts were not in favor here, and now we have His Ex. the Minister of the Interior objecting to their being quoted from. All this was consistent with the nature of the administration of this government for the past ten years. It was only during the last session of this Assembly that I heard the laws of Massachusetts reviled and abused. I have proved by the statutes of that State introduced here by the Minister of Foreign Relations that when a man in Massachusetts and gives his reason, and if the fact is established that he has no means, he is at once discharged. During my experience here, as a Tax Collector, I have never known of a single person exempted from taxation on account of poverty-the old, weak or inferior, were exempted. This system of forcing a man to ronage. Terms reasonable, further particulars made know work out his taxes is contrary to the first article of by applying on the premises, to my Constitution, for if you seed a man's labor you.

D. A. THAYER, Proprietor. were exempted. This system of forcing a man to our Constitution, for if you seil a man's labor, you take his body; you can't separate his work from his person. The same remark can be made in regard to labor contracts. I beg to offer the following amendment to the bill now before the House: "In case no property can be found whereon to levy, then such person, if able-bodied, may be arrested and taken before a judge or magistrate, when an examination shall be entered upon to ascertain if he have property of any description to levy upon, and if no property can be found, and the person arrested make oath that he has no property, he shall be entitled to a discharge."

To this I can see no objection, except perhaps, that it is framed after the statute of Massachusetts. My experience of the Hawaiians is that there are nowhere ing than are foreigners. I submit that imprisonment at hard labor for non-payment of tares, is an act of oppression, and the law ought to be repealed. Perhaps the Hawaiians do not properly value personal Fberty. I have heard it so asserted. If that is so, we ought certainly to endeavor to cultivate the lave of liberty in them. During the last session a bill was urged before the Assembly that was unconstitutional. On a member stating that fact, one of the Ministers said-"You may know that, but the natives do not." If the Constitution is worth anything, it ought to be strictly observed, and if we find a law that is unconstitutional, let it be repealed.

think the statute in question was in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution, as to the liberty of subject before proceeding with the consideration of the bill. He did not pretend that we were in any manner bound by the statutes of Massachusetts. WHICH WILL BE SOLD VERY CHEAP. but when they were quoted be preferred that they should be correctly and fully quoted. He then explained what the provisions of those statutes were in regard to delinquent tax payers. He would only add, that when it was sought to quote laws that were oppressive, the laws of some other State must be quoted, than those of Massachusetts. He, however, was opposed to the bill before the House, The State has a right to make a law requiring the personal services of its citizens, in lien of the tax, ing manner proposed. It certainly was right to make a man work to pay his tax, if he was ablebodied but too lazy to earn anything. But not to make a man work to pay taxes on property, if he has no property. He did not, however, think it was unconstitutional to force an able-bodied man to work out his taxes.

Hon. Mr. Martin was in favor of the bill, but would like to have the subject thoroughly discussed. Hon. A. F. Judd did not think that the laws in regard to taxation were unconstitutional. It was expressly provided that the tax assessors should exempt those who, from poverty, were unable to pay taxes. The proposed amendment therefore was unnecessary, and he should oppose it. House then adjourned.

rence. Sea-sickness is-according to our stomach-and the effect follows-a heaving sickness. As we neared the continental coast, it was again all quiet on the Pacific. Near Point Reyes, where we made the land, occurred what was intended as a great transformation scene, but which resulted in an impressive nautical tableau. It happened in this wise. The muster saw fit to make a tack to the right. The wheel was promptly shifted, the yards were quickly reversed, the captain stood in a triumphant attitude, the sailors belayed their lines with assurance, the passengers assumed an interesting pose of expectation, and-forsooth-the insubordinate bark showed not a shadow of change! So the tableau was complete until the order came to restore the sails and the rudder when the obdurate craft slowly were around to the left. The practical captain found a solution of the fiasco in submarine currents-the perversity of syrens under the sea toying with the keel would have been suggested to mariners in ancient times sailing near Neapolitan shores. Passing the Farralones loomng up through the mist in domes and minarets and pinnacles like a great cathedral guard of the Golden Gate, we dropped anchor near our dock as the bay city began to show its nocturnal lights. Well, we arrived in triumph--for had not the Murray with common air and simple canvas beat the Molongo of the steam line? San Francisco, May 21, 1872.
